

NodeJS is a platform built on Google Chrome's JavaScript runtime. In other words, NodeJS is a part of Chrome's process in running the JavaScript of web pages. The platform is open source and has many advantages including features such as an event-driven and non-blocking input and output. These features allows the platform to be light weight and very efficient. It is used dominantly for developing server-side applications.